ART IN INDUSTRY AND HALLMARK'S LEADERSHIP

by JEAN LIPMAN

Editor, Art in America Magazine

The growing relationship between art and industry has been noted as a major twentieth-century trend. Many articles have discussed it, and last spring's issue of Art in America was devoted to this subject. American business as a patron of the arts seems about to rival in impact and influence the great patrons of the Renaissance. And just as the artists of that era flourished under the patronage of princes, it seems likely that wise patronage of art by industry could help to create a renaissance of the arts here in our time.

As emphasis must rest on the word wise, it is pertinent to look at the recent development of the art-industry program in general and, specifically, at Hallmark's leadership in this area.

The mid-twentieth-century alliance between industry and the arts can perhaps be traced from an awareness by industry of growing public interest in art. Also, a factor has been a new sense of leadership and an enlarged feeling of responsibility on the part of industry toward the public. Business has also sensed that cooperation between artists and industrialists will be mutually advantageous.

All these factors have added up, in the 'forties and 'fifties, to a wave of beneficial cooperation between industry and the fine arts.

There seems to be no question of the advantages of a union between industry and the arts. The specific question of how it will work, in long-term influence on, and results for, the art of our time, is more complex, and depends largely upon the vision, wisdom and genuine art interest of individual and industrial sponsors.

It is obvious that the commissioning, purchase or exhibition of works of art, if too tightly geared to the commercial interest of one organization, will probably confine, if not corrupt, rather than stimulate and vitalize the artist—and mislead rather than educate the public.

Happily, the industrial sponsorship of art has originated many fine programs in recent years, with the aim of allowing the artist the greatest possible freedom within the specified project.

Outstanding examples of such competitions have been the Hallmark Art Awards, originated in 1949 for Hallmark Cards, the first as a Franco-American project and the next two, launched in 1952 and 1955, as international competitions and exhibitions. These Hallmark shows, circulated by museums throughout the country and accompanied by illustrated catalogues, have given the cooperating painters maximum freedom in competing for the commissions, awards, and recognition won for their efforts. The sponsor has gained valid prestige on the basis of the quality of this cultural side-product—in this case, art exhibitions selected by distinguished juries and shown in major museums.

The public has had the advantage of viewing exhibitions displaying international art of high quality. For the current show, which will be exhibited in fifteen museums in 1958 and 1959, fifty artists have received commissions totaling more than $50,000 and they have competed for $7,000 in prizes. The prize-winners were announced at the New York opening of the collection at the Wildenstein Gallery. The gallery directs the project. This year, as the farthest possible development of the ideal of freedom for contributing artists, no theme has been specified, whereas in the three preceding Hallmark competitions the participating artists were restricted to Christmas subjects.

The Hallmark Art Award competitions serve a dual public function, besides contributing to the fame of the sponsoring company: They encourage and support, without in any way restricting, a number of contemporary artists. Furthermore, they stimulate public interest in contemporary painting through the well-publicized museum circuit of the exhibitions. The artists and the industry have, in this instance, cooperated to excellent purpose, and it would be a fine thing for such model projects to multiply. Many more talented artists and art-minded industrial leaders could well join forces. The public, judging from the fact that close to a million people have viewed the Hallmark exhibitions, would welcome further collaboration between art and industry.

THE HALLMARK ART AWARD

For the first time in the four Hallmark Art Award competitions, organized by Hallmark Cards in 1949, and conducted by the Wildenstein Gallery, no theme or subject of any kind was suggested to the fifty artists who were invited to submit paintings for the current exhibition. The result, as the jury has so generously noted on another page, is "...an unusually high level throughout this collection of paintings." As before, the exhibition is international. The collection embraces the work of contemporary artists of sixteen countries of North and South America and Europe: Twenty-eight from the United States, five from France, two from England, three from Italy and one each from Canada, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Venezuela, Denmark, Germany, Holland, Norway, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland.

Of these, the jury chose the painting entitled "California Hills" by Edward Hopper, one of our most distinguished American artists, for the first prize of $2,000. Charles Sheeler, also of the United States, won second prize for his work, "Two Against the White," and the third prize went to England's John Piper for his "Nailsworth, Gloucestershire."

A Special Award of Honor was given to Maurice Vlaminck, the famed French artist, for his painting, "Normandy Village."

Viewers of this collection also will vote for their favorites in the exhibition. On the basis of the ballots cast during the first year of exhibition, additional prizes totalling $1,800 will be awarded—$1,000 for first, $500 for second, and $300 for third.

For this exhibition, as for the entire Hallmark Art Award program, special appreciation is due to Mr. Joyce C. Hall, president of Hallmark Cards, who, as the founder and sponsor of the Awards, has continued to be a generous and liberal patron of the arts.

STATEMENT OF THE JUDGES

The sponsor and the director of the Hallmark Art Award competition are, in the opinion of the judges, to be heartily congratulated for bringing together in their fourth exhibition of contemporary art an unusually high level throughout this collection of paintings.

The group represents a remarkable achievement in this category by reason of its broad international flavor, its wide range of interest and quality, and the juxtaposition, which is decidedly rare, of so many artists of top-ranking stature in a competitive project.

We have noted, further, that this is the sort of enlightened industrial sponsorship of fine art of which American contemporary culture can be forthrightly proud.

FIRST PRIZE, $2,000

EDWARD HOPPER

California Hills

United States

EDWARD HOPPER—For more than 30 years Edward Hopper's name has been in the forefront of American art, his quiet, moving scenes reflecting the broad face of American life while continuing the tradition of realism he has championed so valiantly through the years of the modern movement.

He is now 75, with a host of honors and awards in his background, but his stature continues to grow and expand at a remarkable rate. His watercolor, "California Hills," which has been awarded first prize in the Hallmark Art Award competition, is an example of his unrivaled ability to recognize and capture a significant native landscape and then impart to it a luminous beauty.

Edward Hopper began his art studies at the age of 17, leaving Nyack, N. Y., to enroll in the art classes of Robert Henri in New York City. Later he studied for a year in Paris, but after nearly 17 years he had sold only two pictures. It was not until 1924, when the first one-man show of his work was held, that their extraordinary value became apparent to the public. Since then, although he sometimes paints no more than three pictures a year, his standing is unquestioned and his canvases have been acquired by virtually every leading American art museum and many private collectors.

None of this has influenced to any marked extent the frugal, introspective life Hopper has pursued. With his wife, Josephine, who is also a painter, he moves at intervals from the old-fashioned apartment he has occupied in Manhattan for 18 years to a plain cottage at Cape Cod designed by himself, or onto the network of U.S. highways from Maine to California that he loves to explore, always looking, as he once said, "for something that suggests something to me."

Almost always Hopper has found the suggestions he seeks, in hills and shore, houses, gas stations and bars, city and country that make up the American scene. And he always manages to catch in his pictures a breathless moment of life. That will always be the mark of Edward Hopper's painting.

SECOND PRIZE, $1,000

CHARLES SHEELER

Two Against the White

United States

CHARLES SHEELER—Born in 1883 in Philadelphia, Sheeler was educated at the School of Industrial Art in Philadelphia and at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. He was honored with a one-man show at the Museum of Modern Art, New York, and has exhibited throughout the United States. He is represented in numerous major museum and private collections.

JOHN PIPER—Born in 1903 in Epsom, Piper attended the Richmond School of Art and Royal College of Art. He is represented in the Tate Gallery, the Victoria and Albert Museum, and in many other English and foreign collections. He has done stage designs for the opera and ballet and was the stained glass designer for Oundle College Chapel. Piper painted a series of watercolors of Windsor Castle commissioned by the Queen.

THIRD PRIZE, $750

JOHN PIPER

Nailsworth, Gloucestershire

England

MAURICE VLAMINCK—Born in 1876 in Paris, Vlaminck is genuinely self-taught and is first and foremost an artist. A lifetime spent in contact with nature, far from the conventions and constraints of city life, matured his vision of the world, and particularly of the French countryside. At the age of 81, his way of seeing nature has lost some of its earlier violence, yet his brush has retained all its power, and worldwide renown has in no way diminished his disregard for academic discipline.

ROBERT VICKREY—Born in 1926 in New York City, Vickrey began studying art at the age of sixteen. He continued to paint at Wesleyan University and later at Yale and the Art Students' League in New York. His paintings are found in many important public and private collections, such as the Whitney Museum of American Art.

BERNARD LORJOU—Born in 1908 near Blois, Lorjou's first work was a portrait of his parents painted when he was fifteen. Forced to earn a living at the age of twelve, he left Blois for Paris; and he soon became a successful textile designer. His first love has always been painting; and his intense colors and vigorous, often violent, brush have made him one of the best known contemporary artists of France. Lorjou combines unfailing craftsmanship with a highly personal interpretation of nature and the world in which he lives.

LOREN MACIVER—Born in 1909 in New York, Miss MacIver, except for a year of study at the Art Students' League, is self-taught. She first received recognition while working on the Federal Arts Project between 1936 and 1939. In 1941 she worked on lighting and decoration for the Museum of Modern Art in New York. She has done numerous murals for ocean liners of the American Export Line and other steamship companies. In 1956 she received the Corcoran Award for her painting "The Street."

BERNARD BUFFET—Born in 1928 in Paris, Buffet attended the Ecole des Beaux Arts and at the age of twenty was awarded the important Prix de la Critique. Since 1947 his yearly one-man exhibitions in Paris have met with the greatest success. In addition, his works have been shown in Brussels, Geneva, Venice, Rome, London, Copenhagen, Tokyo, Los Angeles, and New York. He has done stage and costume designs, book illustrations, and a series of monumental canvases illustrating the theme, "the horror of war." He is represented in many important museum and private collections throughout Europe, Canada, and the United States.

CANDIDO PORTINARI—Born in 1903 in the state of Sao Paulo, Portinari was the son of Italian immigrants. At the age of nine he was permitted to help in decorating the village church and decided to become a painter. In 1918, he entered the School of Fine Arts of Rio de Janeiro. During a trip through Europe, he attracted attention with his art exhibits and soon achieved international recognition. He painted the mural "War and Peace" for the UN building and is represented at the Museum of Modern Art in New York and in several international collections.

GUSTAVO FOPPIANI—Born at Udine in 1925, Foppiani began painting at a very early age. It was not, however, until 1945 that he attended the Fine Arts Institute of Piacenza and devoted himself completely to painting. Since his first one-man show in Rome in 1953, he has won wide recognition for his imaginative works. He took part in the 1955 Carnegie International Exhibition. He is represented in many important museum and private collections both in Italy and in the United States.

WALTER STUEMPFIG—Born in 1914 in Chestnut Hill, Pennsylvania, Stuempfig studied at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. A member of the school of romantic contemporary painting, he was elected to the National Academy of Design in 1947. He is widely represented in permanent museum and private collections. At present he lives in Gwynedd Valley, Pennsylvania.

HANS JAENISCH—Born in 1907, Jaenisch began painting at an early age. He belongs to the artistic group Sturm. He has exhibited throughout Germany, as well as in Zurich and London. He took part in the 1950 Carnegie International Exhibition and a group show at the Brooklyn Museum in New York. He is a winner of the Art Award of the City of Berlin and a prize-winner in the Second Hallmark Art Award. He is represented at the Museum of Berlin, and in this country, at the Brooklyn Museum and the Albright Art Gallery, Buffalo. He is a professor at the Art Academy of Berlin.

ANDREW WYETH—Born in Chadds Ford, Pennsylvania, in 1917, Wyeth is the son of the distinguished illustrator N. C. Wyeth. His entire life has been spent in the country in Pennsylvania and Maine. These two places have furnished the whole content of his art. After long and severe training in his father's studio, beginning at the age of fourteen, he held his first one-man show in New York and won the critical acclaim which has been his ever since. His work has been shown in museum exhibitions in every part of the country and is included in all major public and private collections here and abroad.

PAUL AİZPIRI—Born in Paris in 1919, Aizpiri grew up in an atmosphere of intense devotion to artistic tradition and creation. Encouraged by his father, himself a sculptor of talent, young Aizpiri began to paint at an early age. In 1945 his work was included in the first postwar Salon d'Automne, and in 1951 he was awarded the Grand Prix National de Peinture. His one-man exhibitions in Paris in 1953 and 1955 were followed by highly successful showings in Belgium, Denmark, Portugal, and New York.

WILLI HARTUNG—Born in Zurich in 1915, Hartung studied at the School of Arts and Crafts of his native city. He has traveled in France and Italy and was considerably influenced by Italian Gothic painting and architecture. He has participated in numerous exhibitions in Switzerland and was a winner of the second prize in the Second International Hallmark Art Award. At present he teaches painting in Zurich.

WALTER MURCH—Born in Toronto in 1907, Murch studied at the Ontario College of Art and at the Art Students' League and with Arshile Gorky. He also worked for two years in stained glass. Painter, industrial designer, illustrator, and muralist, he has exhibited widely in this country, in England, and in Canada.

PETER HURD—Born in 1904 in Roswell, New Mexico, Hurd studied with N. C. Wyeth. He is well known for his paintings, drawings, and lithographs, an important collection of which is permanently housed in the Roswell, New Mexico, Museum. Hurd has illustrated such classics as The Last of the Mohicans and Great Stories of the Sea and Ships. He served as a war correspondent for Life magazine and the United States Army Air Force between 1942 and 1945. He is especially noted for his interpretation of Western themes and scenes of his native New Mexico.
